PRISM Adopts Class at John G. Carlisle Elementary

Fort Wright, KY – PRISM launched its involvement in the Adopt-A-Class Foundation in August. They have adopted a class at John G. Carlisle Elementary in Covington. The AACF brings together businesses and our most needy urban school children with the purpose of providing role models for the children. These children will be exposed to working adults and can learn about what they do at work each day. Two PRISM employees, Meg Frodge and Emily Billiter, are heading up this program and 21 other employees have volunteered to get involved.

So far, PRISM has had a meet and greet session with the class which included a power point presentation on what their company does and has written letters to the students. “The students are eager to get to know us. They had some interesting things to tell us about themselves and I think our presence will have a positive impact on them,” says Emily Billiter. Each student has been assigned a pen pal at PRISM and will correspond with them and visit them throughout the school year. PRISM will also facilitate a zoo animal day in their classroom and host a Holiday party at the school complete with food, decorations and presents for the children.

A company’s involvement can be a life altering experience for these children as well as for the employees. Meg Frodge says, “The morale at our company is now at an all time high because of our involvement with these kids. We can’t wait for our next letter to arrive from our pen pals and our next opportunity to spend time together.” Other businesses looking to get involved with the Adopt A Class program can go to www.aacfoundation.com.
